

PUBLIC ANNOUNCEMENT

PUBLIC HEALTH RESOURCE SOCIETY

New Delhi, 1 August, 2025

Public Health Resource Society, New Delhi is proud to lead a consortium for the Asia Pacific Observatory (APO) on Health Systems and Policies as a strategic partner for the WHO's APO thematic area of "tackling inequities in health due to gender, social inequities, being uncared or unreached".

The five-year Consortium will consist of the following partnering organisations from India and Australia: Public Health Resource Society, as the consortium lead (Dr. Vandana Prasad, Dr. Rupa Prasad and Dr. Indira Chakravarthi), The University of Sydney (A/Prof. Meru Sheel and Dr. Neha Faruqui), the Indian Institute of Technology-Delhi (Prof. Sanjay Dhir), University of New South Wales-Sydney (Prof Shanti Raman) and Foundation for People-centric Health Systems (Dr. Chandrakant Lahariya).

The Consortium brings together expertise in global health research, community and public health practice, clinical practice and management across various levels of health systems and regions. Each partnering organisation has demonstrated successful outcomes in working with local, state and national level stakeholders with a positive impact on policy and practice. This collective experience will be reflected in the work undertaken for the APO's research and policy advocacy agenda in tackling inequities with a particular focus on gender inequities.
